

Intro Video EduBoxes - Transcript

Have you ever wondered how we can get on with people who are very different to us, who have different ways of thinking, and different ideas? We have designed a series of “EduBoxes” virtual boxes) in which we have teaching materials that examine exactly that question.

With increasing mobility due to digitalization and the forces of globalization, which has been very polemic recently, we are encountering a super-diversity that we have never had before. So instead of ever-stronger identification with our own groups, is there a more constructive way that we can deal with this?

We have designed these EduBoxes so that:

- they are easy to adapt to each classroom and each situation,
- there is maximum flexibility,
- a wide range of new perspectives on culture are included, and
- they are free for everyone to use under the Creative Commons License.

What is an EduBox? Well, you can either use an EduBox in its complete form by following the session plan, or you can take various elements and use them in combination. A session usually includes a case study, some videos, a power point presentation and some other material.

How do we use an EduBox? First of all, you can browse through the session plans, identify what is key to you and select the relevant material for your particular course and your target group.

How can you join the EduBox project? If you have an idea, a case study or a text, then please get in touch with us through the website and we will add it to the relevant box or you can design your own box.

When you send us your material, these are the people who will receive it: It's the members of the project team, Adelheid Iken, Yeliz Yilidirim-Krannig, Francisco Javier Montiel Alafont and Peter James Witchalls.

We'd love to hear from you!
